Early Kraut, Yellows Resistant (75 days)

This variety is comparatively of recent introduction, but it already holds a foremost position in the class of Midseason Yellow Resistant varieties. Thus among growers of Cabbage for Kraut, it is regarded as the highly developed. In matter of yield, it approaches 30 tons per acre—in a normal season. It is Yellow resistant to the extent of 95 to 100 per cent. The head is typically ball-shaped and covered by only two overlapping green leaves. The interior is very tight and solid, making the heads average a weight of 6 pounds. The overlapping burst easily. The foliage is dark green. The stem is fairly short, thus about 4 inches in height.

Klitgord's Selected Danish Ballhead (100 days)

This name stands for the strain of Danish Ballhead, Short Stem, originated in Northern New York State many years ago. It is a very select strain, developed with great care and understanding, and through continuous, careful selection of stock-plants, the original type has been kept true from year to year. The type is an ideal one and its characteristics are markedly uniform. The stem is short and the leaves are bluish-green. The head is large, perfectly ball-shaped, and covered with only two or three green surface leaves. The interior is exceptionally firm and solid. The maturity is about 100 days from date of transplanting. In seasons with normal rainfall, the heads average 6-7 pounds, and the total yield approximates 30 tons per acre. There exists no finer strain of Ballhead Cabbage for either Storage or Kraut.
